“Finding the Best Evidence to Meet Nursing Information Needs” is a six hour workshop for health sciences librarians who want to improve their ability to serve nursing managers, staff, faculty, and students. It focuses on the best evidence-based information resources for nursing practice and research, including databases, websites, and the knowledge-based literature. The instructor will review high-quality information resources and demonstrate search techniques for finding answers to nursing questions submitted by participants. The instructor and participants will share and discuss ideas for meeting nursing information needs in both academic and practice settings.
